Per The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention:

Community- and faith-based organizations (CFBOs), working together with schools, businesses, healthcare systems, and state, local, tribal, and territorial health departments, have an important role in slowing the spread of diseases, especially among high risk populations.

It is important to realize that government, communities, and individuals must work together to prepare for and respond to COVID-19. A CFBO is one part of a community, local, regional, and national collaborative effort. CFBOs often serve those who are most vulnerable, such as older people and those with serious underlying health conditions – like heart disease, lung disease, and diabetes – who are at higher risk of developing severe COVID-19 illness. This may include members and regular attendees or people they serve as well as persons from the broader community.
